

The film tells the inspiring and true story of how newly elected President Nelson Mandela joined forces with the captain of South Africa's rugby team to help unite their country through sport. Mandela knew his nation was still racially and economically divided after apartheid. So he worked out a plan to bring his nation together: with South Africa hosting the Rugby World Cup in 1995, he met Francois Pienaar, the captain of the Springboks, and called upon him to win the World Cup.
